The following article from Fast Forward should prove to be helpful, 'Ilinciples rips for showing yourchile. You don't have to be a rocket scientist to teach your child science. Just do simple things like these:

Encourage your child to be a "collector." Help him organize objects like seeds, rocks, shells and bottle

Encourage investigation. Give your child a magnifying glass. Ask her, "What do your see?" "What's similar and what's different?"
 Talk about the science that happens in your home. For instance, which cereals get soggy? Why do foods in the refrigerator get moldy? Why so some plants need more water the others?

Show an interest in science ourself. Predict the weather. Observe the stars. Weigh snow. Mix Nurture curiosity. Ask your child questions like, "Why do you think..." What might happen it..."

and "How can we find out..."
Go to the library. Check out books and videos on different science topics.
