Dobbs participates in Road Quest 2000 at Cumberland

Most college students carefully select their spring break destination for a week of maximum relaxation and fun. However, during Cumberland College's spring break, March 11-18, 2000, over sixty students ventured to lands unknown with Baptist Student Union (BSU) for Road Quest 2000. These students applied to serve during their break without knowing exactly where they would be going. Eight teams traveled from Houston to work in inner city ministry for people living with HIV/AIDS. Each student was placed on a team based on the type of ministry they selected on an application. They were each given information to assist in packing and preparing for their trip. Students didn't know their team assignment or destination until they were on route.

Stephanie Dobbs from Mt. Vernon, is a Cumberland first-year student, is a Cumberland first-year student and the daughter of Bentley and Stephanie Dobbs. She is on the team that traveled to Panama City, Florida. Students led numerous services at Northside Baptist Church, in two children's homes, at two nursing homes, at a crisis pregnancy center, and a local medical and high school.

On Saturday, March 18, the teams gathered together in Knoxville, Tennessee at Wallace Memorial Baptist Church to share their Road Quest 2000 experiences. "The trip was a success in every way," said Dean Whitaker, Cumberland BSU Director. "Not only did the students work hard and get a lot accomplished, but they learned that in giving, we are often the ones who are blessed the most." Not a bad lesson for college students to learn, especially on Spring Break.
