She appreciated it so much. She wanted us three daughters by her side. But her trouble are over now. She went through many heart breaks. But she has met all her family now. I'm waiting to meet her and all the family. Moma I don't go to church on Mother's Day. I just sit at home and weep. But guess I'm selfish to want you back. Good bye, Moma. You are having a wonderful time.

New Drug Labels

By: Hazel Jackson
County Extension Agent for Family and Consumer Science

Do you ever feel like you need a medical degree to follow the directions on over-the-counter drugs?

Wouldn't it be nice if labels were easier to follow and understand? The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) thinks so. That's why it's requiring over-the-counter medicines to carry, new, easier-to-read labels. The new labels use simple language and larger type to convey key information, such as the product's use and proper dosing instructions. The new labels also clearly list the drug's active and inactive ingredients. Warnings and possible side effects appear in bold type.

While the new labels contain the identical information as current labels, the hope is that the new, easier format will help consumers find the right products for their needs and use them safely. Many products will begin carrying the new labels within 2 years.

The FDA is also requiring that dietary supplements carry similar standardized labels. These labels simplify information about the supplement's ingredients and uses.

Happy Birthday May 11th

In memory of my husband,
Ishmael Tackett
When your loved one is with Jesus and Jesus lives within your heart Then you are not far apart.

Pauline Tackett

In tribute to my wonderful mother, on Mother's Day Mildred Bailey, who passed away on January 23rd, 1997. She rest within her easy chair and from her wrinkled brow she brushes strands of snow white hair away from eyes that smile.

At little mother kind and sweet dreams of the days gone by when there were sounds of tiny feet and a wee baby's cry.

With her quiet resort there she travels back again through paths with skies so bright and fair where she in youth had been.

But there are smiles, a happy tone to cheery words that flow that babe of yesterday now grown is still her babe you know.

And as the banks in the sun's glow that floods the window sill to gleam across the floor to flow in quiet peace so still. A loving heart still lives within. A withered hand doth hold the beauty that has always been through years while growing old.

Though time may change a mother's face, her features may grow slow, but nothing can take mother's place within our hearts we know.

So if you still have your mother here hold her dear for soon she will be gone and you will miss her as much as I miss my dear mother. Love you mom!

Happy Mother's Day

From daughter, Lora
Westfield Hamilton

Another Mother's Day. And mamma you won't be here. How I could see you in your rocking chair I wish again.

You won't need it. You are with Jesus.

And are very happy I know. The rocking chair is gone now.

You are in Jesus' arms with all his wonderful charm.

When all your friends and neighbors come in to wish you well.

She will be very happy. The beautiful smile on your face.

It didn't take much to please Moma. First a Mother's Day card.

As I read it over and over to her.
