Wells attend Forward in the Fifth Technology Institute

Local educators John Wells and Janet Wells of Rockeastle County High School joined more than 80 fellow teachers, school library media specialists, aides, principals, community members and others for Forward in the Fifth's Technology Institue at Paul L. Dumber High School in Lexington. The professional development seminar was held June 20-22 and offered training for those interested in improving their skills on integration of software into the school's curriculum. This workshop was designed to give educators the opportunity to dearn a variety of software packages and to begin work on

"We try to provide training that gives participants something they can use when they return to their class-rooms and schools," said Executive Director Ginny Eager. "Our offer-ings always receive good evaluations from participants, many of whom return to later workshops as presenters."

Forward in the Fifth's professional development program offers a wide variety of workshops and seminars. Topics scheduled for the next two years include hands-on technology training, classroom management, grant writing, multi-day offerings. ## Ayers family home from Mackinac Island trip

Lavern, Craig and William Jerry Ayers have just returned home from their vacation trip to Michigan. They visited Frankenmuth, Michi-gan, which is one of the most authen-tic Bavarian architecture to be found anywhere in the United States.

They are at the world famous Bavarian Inn Restaurant, which was established in 1888.

They also visited "Bronners pristmas Wonderland" the worlds largest Christmas store with one and one half acres of salesroom and 27 acres of beautifully Christmas landscaped grounds.
