Suburbs either.

In the meantime, I've called Gen, because Toby left here going fast enough to beat her back to London even though she had a 45 minute head start in a big Buick, and I've been in touch with Janice Jordan in Southern Indiana because I'm not exactly sure which direction Toby was going once he hit the main road. Jan's husband, James said he was pretty sure that it was the same cat that came screaming through his backyard while he was out feeding the moles the poison peanuts I recently sent him.

The Jordans, especially James, apparently have little confidence in the Poison Peanut solution to their mole problem that I have passed along.

In the meantime, if you see old Toby, give me a call or email me. He is a beautiful cat. Darkish gray with nearly black stripes and orangish on the belly and undersides. And he has to be tired. I'll come and get him if he shows up at any place because his favorite mat and all his food and water bowls are out in my garage and I sure could use his company.
