definitely needs to be more than one talk.

Talking with your kids about sex any me difficult, but it is a parent's right and responsibility. Many of use did not grow up in an environment where the subject was discussed. Some parents may be afraid they do not know the right answers or feel confused about the proper amount of information to offer. Start talking about sex when the child is young. Be open. Talk about what is right, instead of always saying what is wrong; or what not to do. Children receive a lot of sexuality information from media, school, religious institutions and, their religious institutions and, their religious institutions and their friends. But parents are the first and most important sex educators for their children. Kids deserve facts and honest answers from adults who care

10. Discuss that at times your teen may feel more comfortable talking with someone other than you. Together, think of other trusted adults with whom they ear talk.
When your child brings up questions about sex, here are some things you can say that are door-opener responses:

What do you think?
 That's a good question.
 I want to understand how you.

Tell me what that means to you.
 Tell me what that means to you.

get along.

Firefighter Nelson Graves told the council, and the crowd that although many members of the department did not know about the purchase of the substation until they read it in the Signal. (they thought it was a good idea.

it in the Sigmal, they thought it was a good idea. Carloc Cash told the crowd that the thought the two departments could put their differences aside for the betterment of the public. Cash said that the firefighters were volunteers and if they truly wanted to volunteer they would do what is best for the Brodhead area residents.

Note: the end of the meeting, Brothead Rural Fire Chief Johnny Benge told the crowd that the Rural Department would bring back a pumper truck to the city of Brothead and that every certified fireflette could drive the truck except Brodhead City Fire Chief Tim Albright.

Broothead City Fire Chief Im

Local resident Greg Mink said that Benge told him that he did not rust Albright to drive truck, alhough he was the city's fire phef.
Judge Carlofits basically told the crowd that the country did not have any control over the rural department,
atthough they had borrowed money
for them through the Kentucky Association of Counties for the pur chase of the building on Hwy. 70 and he also pointed out that the three member rural board was in charge of all decisions.

say over what the departments de-cided on their own.

The rural fire department does makes the payment on the building through the county, although the county pays their insurance and much of the maintenance on the trucks.

When it was all said and done, with the help of Rural fire department Chairman David Colson and members of the Brodhead City Council, the two departments agreed the rural department would take a pumper truck back to the city of Brodhead's ick back to the city of B fire house.

They also agreed that any certified firefighter, including Albright would be allowed to drive the truck housed at Brodhead on a rural fire. Basically the decision put the fire protection of area residents back as the same way it had been for years, although both departments still exists and have two fire chiefs.
